NOTED ROMANCE IS TOLD ABOUT

In An Interesting Article in the National Waterways Magazine of Latest Issue.

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 22.—How Louis Philippe, duc d'Orleans and later King of the French, lived for several years at Bardstown, Ky., and even paid court to a pretty maid of Frankfort, the state capital, is related in an article in the National Waterways Magazine, published in this city by the National Rivers and Harbors Congress, by the Countess Spottiswood-Mackin. The article is profuse in illustration of scenes identified with the asylum found by the Bourbon exile during a most troublous Marat had proposed the setting of a price upon his head, and of priceless objects of art presented by him to St. Joseph's Cathedral at Bardstown after he had become sovereign of France and, still later, following the downfall of his dynasty. Among the art works pictured are several vestments of exceeding beauty and great intrinsic value, embroidered by Louis Philippe's queen, Marie Aemilia, and his sister, Adelaide, after the flight of the court to England, which still repose in the Bardstown cathedral.

Returning from the recent world peace conference at St. Louis, whither she had been sent as a delegate by Governor Herman Sulzer, of New York, and by the president-general of the daughters of the American Revolution, the Countess Spottiswood-Mackin made a pilgrimage to her alma mater, the convent academy at Nazareth, and while there she obtained material evidence of the sojourn of Louis Philippe, which has been shrouded in mystery and doubt by historical writers of the past. Photographs of the rectory of Bishop B. J. Flaget, at Bardstown, where Louis Philippe was frequently entertained by his confessor and spiritual advisor, and of the sacred objects presented to the religious community at Bardstown, including a bell which still hangs in the tower of the cathedral, are published for the first time.

The stay of the Bourbon duke in Kentucky was not without a suggestion of romance, the Countess relates, continuing:

"While visiting Frankfort, the ducal party was entertained at the Love House, which has ever been associated with Burr's conspiracy, where a gala ball was stendered in their honor. The stately minut was danced, and Louis Philippe invited a young lady to dance with him, but she declined, fearing to wound the feelings of a plain young man with whom she had but a short while before declined to enter the minut. That the loyal falden made a more than superficial impression upon his higness is apparent from the fact that, when, three decades or more later, he found himself king of the French, a gentleman from Frankfort who had known him during his exile called upon him at Paris. The king inquired for his 'Frankfort queen' and chatted pleasantly of the ball at Love House and the incident of the minut."

"In a centennial ode to the City of Frankfort, in 1886, Major H. T. Stanton, of that place, penned the following verse:

"The Love House stands no longer here."

Where from the crowd secluded
The cold ambitious Aaron Burr
His scheme of empire brooded,
But some are mindful of the dance
In stately grace perfected,
Where once the proffered hand of

France,
A Frankfort queen rejected."

"Upon his return to France and his elevation to the throne of the Bourbons, Louis Philippe was not unmindful of the kindnesses that had been bestowed upon him while he tarried in the Kentucky hills. The material evidences of his gratitude are many about Bardstown and happily these are extant today. It may be indeed be said that a potent art influence was exerted in the academic circle of St. Joseph's College at Bardstown and of the neighboring Nazareth Academy, which is incorporated in the same religious community, by the donation of priceless treasures of painting, statuary and objects 'dart by Louis Philippe after he became the sovereign of France. Among the pictures which yet hang in the cathedral church at Bardstown are 'St. Peter in Chains' and 'A Winged St. Mark,' by Vanduyck; 'St. John the Baptist' and 'The Flaying of St. Bartholomew,' by Rubens; 'The Coronation of the Blessed Virgin,' by Murillo, and an unknown painter's 'The Annunciation.' Such a group of masterpieces, these, as might grace the transept of an Old World cathedral and might be coveted of a continental city. They are large pictures and are hung high in the silent nave, where the light from upped windows illumines them and where, at eventide, they assume a wondrous symbolism of form and color."

An amusing episode is told of a pleasure-craving landlady who declined to care for Louis Philippe when he fell ill at her hostelry, preferring the attractions of a travelling show, the first to reach the town, to waiting upon the sejon of the royal house of France.

"The party visited George Washington at Mount Vernon in 1797, and it was the first president of the United States who planned for Louis Philippe and his brothers, an itinerary of travel through the more settled portions of the young country that took them through to Pittsburg and down the Ohio river and into the mountains of Kentucky and Tennessee. The western limit of their tour was reached at Nashville and on May 13, 1797, they turned northward through the wooded valley of the Big Barren river, resting at a ferryman's on the Green river. They crossed the Salt river at Pitt's Fork with difficulty, and night found them arrived at the inn of a Captain Bean at Bardstown, a settlement of about 150 houses and great expectations. The personal diary of Louis Philippe brings to light some interesting facts as to the circumstances attending his arrival and sojourn at Bardstown. He was taken seriously ill, and, although importuned by his brothers to minister to the needs of the distinguished Frenchman, the landlady could not be induced to forego the attraction of a travelling show that had just reached the town."

THE HOUSE CLEANING JOKE
Thousands of jokes are written each year on housecleaning by men who do not realize what a small tragedy housecleaning is to women. It has to be done, and it has to be done thoroughly. Housecleaning is fun, though. If Easy Task soap is used. Made of pure coconut oil, borax, napha and clean, sweet talow, it can be used on woodwork, floors, curtains, rugs, lace, china, cut glass and everything else—rids them of dirt and dust in half the time of cheap yellow soaps.—Advertisement."
